

Dimensional puts boards on notice for generous executive bonuses during Covid

ERIC JOHNSTON

The $900bn US investment giant Dimensional Fund Advisors is taking aim at Australian companies intent on paying generous executive bonuses while ignoring the impact of Covid-linked losses or the benefit from inflated earnings due to JobKeeper support.

Dimensional, backed by famed US investor David Booth, is also warning boards not to follow the path of European majors such as Shell, or more recently Rio Tinto, in having shareholders vote on company-backed climate proposals at annual meetings, arguing this can lead to a form of greenwashing.

Dimensional has billions of dollars tied up in ASX companies and holds sizeable stakes in Australian companies such as BHP, Boral, Ampol and Wesfarmers across several funds.

According to a scorecard of last year's voting track record, Dimensional used its clout to vote against Rio Tinto directors as a result of the Juukan Gorge scandal.

It also took aim at Star City in late 2020 for issuing short-term bonuses to management despite Covid-linked losses, and tech company Next DC for issuing shares to new investors at a discount.

But Dimensional plans to focus on bonus structures for executives, particularly for boards that are seeking to look through Covid-linked pressures which caused earnings to drop and continue to pay executives bonuses.

Dimensional head of Asia-Pacific portfolio management Bhanu Singh said there had been "overreach" by boards and management in pushing for an extraordinary event over agreed metrics.

"Covid did a bit of that in Australia ... 'we will forego this particular period because of Covid issues, and therefore we'll continue to pay executives as if Covid didn't happen to us'. That doesn't make any sense ... this is part of running a business," Mr Singh said in an interview.

"We want a guarantee around how executives should be compensated. We want the metrics to be pretty clear.

"And we want the link to be based on long-term performance and not on single triggers."

The comments underscore how Australian companies are coming under intense pressure from big international investors to lift their governance to global standards.

Mr Singh said boards and directors should be in the firing line if there were failures of governance and he was prepared to use his fund to vote against directors.

"Corporate governance is the driver of price improvement and returns. So we take it very seriously," he said.

"We think the board of directors should manage all risks at the company, and should have oversight over those risks.

"For example, climate change or social issues, all of these should be considered by the board as another risk as part of company operations."

Dimensional has been holding talks with Rio Tinto since the iron ore miner's Juukan Gorge cave destruction scandal to ensure the company is overhauling its governance and environment processes.

Rio got itself into the Juukan situation due to a "failure of governance at the board level", Mr Singh said.

The Texas-based Dimensional is known globally for its factor-style investing and focus on long-term returns.

Latest figures show its flagship Australian core equity trust last calendar year returned 18.9 per cent, outperforming its benchmark, the S&P/ASX 300. The fund, co-founded by David Booth, Rex Sinquefeld and Larry Klotz 40 years ago, started out pushing for higher governance standards across small cap companies.

Mr Singh said it could be a matter of time before more Australian companies started following the overseas model of giving investors the opportunity to vote on company-sponsored non-binding climate change proposals.

As well as Rio Tinto, Santos and Woodside plan to ask shareholders for an annual vote on the adoption of a climate report.

He argued this was becoming a way for companies to outsource complex decision-making when it came to climate change.

"If you look through their proposals, they generally don't have concrete enough information to make a decision. This is not a welcome trend.

"The company is basically saying: we want to make these massive changes to our business and we want to put the vote to shareholders to tell us whether we should do that." Separately, Mr Singh threw support behind local proxy advisers, saying Dimensional had urged the Morrison government not to push ahead with its now-scrapped crackdown on the sector.

Treasurer Josh Frydenberg pushed through proxy changes before Christmas, but the new rules were overturned by the Senate earlier this month.

The shake-up exposed the four proxy advisory firms in Australia to fines of up to $11.1m for companies and $1.1m for individuals. It also required proxy firms to submit their reports to companies they were advising on five days before giving it to clients.

The changes were an "unnecessary burden" with higher costs likely to be passed on to investors and super funds.

Mr Singh noted that proxy advisers were a "useful input" but it was the fund manager that retained control over voting at all times.

RISKS

Past performance is not a guarantee of future results. There is no guarantee strategies will be successful. Investments involve risks. The investment return and principal value of an investment may fluctuate so that an investor's shares, when redeemed, may be worth more or less than their original value.

The information in this document is provided in good faith without any warranty and is intended for the recipient's background information only. It does not constitute investment advice, recommendation, or an offer of any services or products for sale and is not intended to provide a sufficient basis on which to make an investment decision. It is the responsibility of any persons wishing to make a purchase to inform themselves of and observe all applicable laws and regulations. Unauthorized copying, reproducing, duplicating, or transmitting of this document are strictly prohibited. Dimensional accepts no responsibility for loss arising from the use of the information contained herein.

"Dimensional" and "Dimensional Fund Advisors" refer to the Dimensional separate but affiliated entities generally, rather than to one particular entity.

These entities are Dimensional Fund Advisors LP, Dimensional Fund Advisors Ltd., Dimensional Ireland Limited, DFA Australia Limited, Dimensional Fund Advisors Canada ULC, Dimensional Fund Advisors Pte. Ltd., Dimensional Japan Ltd., and Dimensional Hong Kong Limited. Dimensional Hong Kong Limited is licensed by the Securities and Futures Commission to conduct Type 1 (dealing in securities) regulated activities only and does not provide asset management services.

AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND: This material is issued by DFA Australia Limited (AFS License No. 238093, ABN 46 065 937 671). This material is provided for information only. No account has been taken of the objectives, financial situation or needs of any particular person. Accordingly, to the extent this material constitutes general financial product advice, investors should, before acting on the advice, consider the appropriateness of the advice, having regard to the investor's objectives, financial situation and needs. Investors should also consider the Product Disclosure Statement (PDS) and the target market determination (TMD) that has been made for each financial product either issued or distributed by DFA Australia Limited prior to acquiring or continuing to hold any investment. Go to au.dimensional.com/funds to access a copy of the PDS or the relevant TMD. Any opinions expressed in this material reflect our judgement at the date of publication and are subject to change.